U.S. Federal Income Tax

Consequences: For a brief description of the United States tax effects of an investment in the notes, see Certain U.S. Federal Income Tax Considerations in the Prospectus dated May 5, 2014, as supplemented by U.S. Federal Income Tax Considerations in the Prospectus Supplement dated February 26, 2016.

The notes offered hereby will be treated as part of the same issuance as the original notes for U.S. federal income tax purposes and will have the same issue price as the original notes.

If a U.S. Holder purchases the notes for a price in excess of the stated principal amount of the notes, the amount of such excess is bond premium for U.S. federal income tax purposes. A U.S. Holder may elect under Section 171 of the Code to amortize such bond premium under the constant yield method over the remaining term of the notes. If a U.S. Holder makes this election, it will apply to all taxable debt instruments having amortizable bond premium that the holder owns or subsequently acquires and may not be revoked without the consent of the IRS. Amortizable bond premium will be treated as an offset to interest income on the notes rather than as a separate item of deduction. A U.S. Holder's tax basis in the note will be reduced by the amount of bond premium so amortized. If a U.S. Holder does not elect to amortize bond premium, then the holder's tax basis in the notes will not be reduced by the amortization of the premium and the holder will therefore have lower gain or a higher loss on the sale or disposition of the notes. In such case, the holder will be required to report the full amount of stated interest on the note as ordinary income, even though it may be required to recognize a capital loss (which may not be available to offset ordinary income) on a sale or other disposition of the notes. U.S. Holders should consult their tax advisors regarding the application of these rules.
