ITEM 5. OTHER EVENTS

On October 22, 2003, WebMD Corporation announced that it had entered into a definitive agreement to acquire Medifax-EDI, Inc., a leading provider of real-time medical eligibility transaction services and other claims management solutions to hospitals, medical centers, physician practices and other medical organizations throughout the United States. Medifax-EDI is a privately held, Nashville-based company.

The purchase price is $280 million, including certain assumed liabilities, and will be paid in cash. The purchase price is subject to customary post-closing adjustments. Prior to closing, Medifax-EDI will distribute its Pharmacy Services companies to its owner, an affiliate of Crescent Capital Investments, Inc., and these companies are not included in the transaction.

The completion of the acquisition is conditioned upon the expiration or termination of the waiting period under the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act and other customary closing conditions. The transaction is expected to close prior to the end of November 2003. Upon closing, Medifax-EDI will be combined with WebMD Envoy, WebMD's Nashville-based Transaction Services business.

Medifax-EDI is a leading provider of medical eligibility transaction services which enable providers to verify insurance coverage for their patients on a real-time basis. WebMD Envoy provides electronic transactions and business process outsourcing services which enable the nation's providers and payers to facilitate reimbursement. WebMD believes that the acquisition of Medifax-EDI will strengthen WebMD Envoy's position as a single-source vendor of all-payer, all-transaction service offerings to the healthcare provider marketplace. When combined, WebMD Envoy would become a leading supplier of both medical claims and real-time transaction solutions for both commercial and government payers.
